Local Media

Tune into local radio or TV stations: Emergency messages will be broadcast over local media channels, and local meteorologists will give important weather information.

Outdoor Sirens

When sirens sound, immediately go indoors and turn on a local TV or radio station to find out what the threat is. Outdoor warning sirens alert us to chemical spills, severe weather and other outdoor emergencies.

Do not assume there is no emergency because skies are clear.

Weather Radios

You can rely on weather radios when other forms of communication fail or power is lost. These radios receive National Weather Service warnings, watches, forecasts and other hazardous information, 24 hours a day.
